Indiana University today (May 19) announced a two-year pilot agreement with AT&T that will provide opportunities for business graduate students, faculty and staff to take advantage of the communications mobility provided by BlackBerry® smartphones.

This is the first such agreement between AT&T and a university. The program, negotiated through University Information Technology Services at IU, will be launched on July 1 in partnership with IU's Kelley School of Business.

"Mobility is in high demand, and mobile applications and delivery are essential for higher education," said IU Associate Vice President for Support Sue Workman. "Indiana University is pleased to have the opportunity to engage with AT&T in this first-of- a-kind program." Press Release link
